

Mary Johnson is an international human rights lawyer and consultant whose practice focuses on helping enterprises navigate their responsibility to respect human rights while simultaneously enhancing business value.

After starting her career in the California state government and various NGOs, Mary transitioned into the private sector by starting a social enterprise in Thailand, and she blends these perspectives to take a multidisciplinary approach to problem-solving in the complex nexus between business and human rights. She has worked with clients in the extractive, manufacturing, and financial services sectors, delivering pragmatic solutions to implement and report on performance under international legal norms, including the UN Guiding Principles on Business and Human Rights and the UN Global Compact.

In addition to her consulting work, Mary provides specialist international legal advice and advocacy in cases that impact on human rights. She has worked on cases and with clients in Colombia, Equatorial Guinea, Finland, Japan, Kenya, Lebanon, Mexico, Somaliland, Switzerland, Uganda, Ukraine, the UK and the US. Mary has been engaged to speak on business and human rights at various fora in London and at international events including the UN Forum on Business and Human Rights, the UN Human Rights Council, and the Global Women's Executive Summit.
